Reforge Himalayas

From waste to wonder-
Permanent Public Sculpture

Reforging Into A Reminder

The Beas River at Manali once ran blue in travel photographs.

Today, that colour is changing.

The Rohtang Glacier, one of the sources feeding the Beas has retreated significantly over the past few decades. Along the river, communities are watching the landscape transform in real time.

Reforge Himalayas was built with one honest conviction: that art made from the waste of a damaged ecosystem, placed permanently in the public spaces

Discarded material is collected, reimagined by artists, and transformed into permanent public sculptures across Manali, leaving behind something no campaign, post or press release could: A physical reminder.

How It Works

THE TEAM

5 selected teams of engineers, designers, sculptors and makers work towards the same waste challenge.

THE WASTE

Discarded metal, tyres, rubbers, bike parts, chains, silencer, machinery parts and industrial waste are collected into a common material kit.

THE BUILD

Over 3 festival days, each team transforms discarded material into a functional public sculpture and functional furniture placed permanently in Manali park.

THE FESTIVAL

The finished works are unveiled and judged at HIFAF for artistic vision, design, engineering and environmental impact, and community resonance.

THE LEGACY

All 5 sculptures remain permanently installed across Manali area, with QR codes sharing the story, waste weighted diverted and glacier data.
