A Living Canvas of
Himalayan Stories

Art as Testimony

A painting sold in a gallery may eventually disappear into a drawing room.

A painting made at HIFAF has another life.

When an artist paints “Vanishing Villages” at the festival, the canvas becomes more than an artwork. It becomes a record of a place in time, and evidence that this village stood here, this river once ran blue, this glacier once reached this far.

Year after year, these works begin to tell a larger story: how the Himalayas are changing, what is disappearing, and what deserves to be remembered.

What HIFAF is building is not simply an art archive. It is a living climate archive, created by artists, in presence, and added to every year.
