Mountains Sound Lab

Sampling the Himalayas,
Composing the Future

Why We Must Record Now

In the Kullu Valley, a traditional brass bugle called the Nar Singh has been played in temple processions for nearly three centuries.

Today, the last known player is in his seventies, and no proper recording of this sound exists in a national archive.

When he stops playing, an important part of Himachal's living cultural heritage could disappear with him.

Mountains Sound Lab exists to preserve that. In alignment with the Ministry of Culture's mandate to preserve intangible cultural heritage, we document and archive traditional sounds before they are lost. But preservation is only the beginning.

We also introduce these sounds to a new generation of musicians and producers, allowing old traditions to be heard, reinterpreted, and loved again.
